gif, or whatever. Add your own voiceover in seconds, you can edit it as much as you want, cut it in any length. It's extremely simple but extremely powerful. The time has come for our 2013 Year in Review, and we've done a pretty good job keeping the grumbling at a minimum. We're going to look at how things went for us from the past year with a little more analysis than usual, since we've kind of hit a bump in the road of making money this year. First, let's talk about the end of 2013: what went wrong, and what went right. The end of 2013 has been quite a whirlwind. We had a crazy video (why is every screen capture so boring?) and we celebrated Christmas with the family. The video was one of our better endeavors, but the company that we worked with didn't give us a single penny from the exposure. We didn't even receive a free review copy. In other words, this was a job that we did solely for the company, which was fair since it was a test project. Unfortunately, the client didn't care about our experience, and we couldn't help them anyway. The video was just a shiny distraction. Even though that was a low point, the company did help us out in the long run. They were good clients, and we didn't have any issues with them. We've worked with them before, and we've been very happy with their work. We still have our relationship with the company, so if we're ever interested in working with them again, we could do so. It's business, and we all know that. I get it, but it's a bit disappointing when you get a deal that doesn't pay out. That said, they've been one of our best clients. It wasn't all bad for the past year. We've had a good amount of success. A few people asked how our company made money, and that's what we're going to focus on in this section. Revenue I'm going to start with revenue. Revenue has been surprisingly good. For the first time, we're receiving a decent amount of money from YouTube. We've never made any money off of YouTube 82157476af
